

Q:

Language is studied in which of the following fields?

- anthropology
- area studies
- philosophy
- communication
- education
- linguistics
- biology
- psychology
- computer science
- literature
- neuroscience
- foreign languages

A:

All of them.

The Penn Working Group in Language supports the broad exchange of ideas and resources among students and researchers interested in language. Its aim is to promote progress in language research as a whole.

Come and find out what researchers in other fields are doing, share your ideas, and learn about the resources available to language researchers like you.

This year's themes include computer assisted learning, dialect and language contact, language policy, pragmatics, syntax and semantics, translation.

second symposium

penn working group in language

saturday, april 2 9:30am – 5:00pm
levine hall

Plenary speakers: Asif Agha, Steven Gross

Open to the public. Register free online at: www.ling.upenn.edu/pwgl/symposium_2005/