The COVID-19 Pandemic has brought about significant upheaval in people's lives across the globe. Its spread has not only impacted on healthcare systems but also led to an abrupt interruption to traditional modes of education and carrying out research on campus, catapulting educators and academics online, leading to teaching, assessment and researching remotely in order to bridge that gap. This seminar provides a platform of discussion among academics on adapting at such a fast pace and the challenges faced as well as an opportunity to consider the glass as half full while moving forward through the de-escalation period and reflecting on what the future holds.
