

CALL FOR PAPERS

Journal of Language, Culture and Society [LCS]

LCS is an international peer-reviewed journal open to high quality contributions addressing complex intersections of language, culture and society through the lens of any of the analytical paradigms stemming from the sociolinguistic and anthropological study of language, discourse and communication; it particularly welcomes empirical and theoretical articles challenging our assumptions of how language and culture get entrenched with regimes of power and larger dynamics of inequality, difference and change.

Continuing with the focus of the first issue to be published in the spring of 2019, future contributors are encouraged to break new ground by engaging in radical conversations about the social, cultural, racial, economic and historical conditions of language and communication as well as about solidarity, hope and change. This journal also aims to help promote and expand more inclusive and emancipatory possibilities of knowledge publishing and welcomes alternative formats of academic writing.
