LLL's Young Researchers Conference (UMR 7270 CNRS - BNF)

University of Tours (France)

Thursday 26th March 2014

Conference Theme: Data and Theory

The issue of the nature of linguistic data along with the principles to be used for the constitution of these data has become central in recent years, and this is demonstrated by the development of corpus linguistics. However, the data are often interpreted through the prism of a particular theory, which can lead us to wonder if doing research in a given theoretical background might influence the collection and interpretation of the data. Conversely, can data impose the application of a certain theory?

The reflexion which we propose to conduct during this conference will focus on the relationship between data and theory, as this relationship is essential to linguistic analysis.

We invite young researchers (master students, PhD students and young doctors) to submit abstracts on the interconnection between data and the analysis of these data within a given theory. The communication may focus on the methods of collecting and organising data, the way to interpret these data, how data can influence a theory or how a theory can influence data.
