

The Inaugural Margaret Florey Scholarship

Do you want to attend the International Conference on Language Documentation & Conservation in Hawai'i (February 2019)?

RNLD is excited to offer this scholarship to one Indigenous language worker!

Many of you will know Margaret Florey, who co-founded RNLD in 2004 and directed the organisation until retiring in 2017. This scholarship honours her many years of hard work and passion in the service of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages and their speakers.

The inaugural Margaret Florey Scholarship will support one Indigenous language worker to attend the International Conference on Language Documentation & Conservation (ICLDC), from February 28 - March 3, 2019 in Honolulu. The conference brings together linguists, students, and community activists to share resources and research, and discuss important issues in documenting and revitalising the world's endangered languages.

Details:

- The scholarship is open to all Indigenous Australians working on their own language
- The scholarship, valued at $500, includes conference registration plus a contribution towards accommodation costs
- RNLD has pre-purchased the registration so you don't need to register
- Please write 200 words about why you want to go to ICLDC, and how it will help your language work

Send to: contact@rnld.org

Deadline: November 1, 2018

Phone: 03 9077 9500

For more information about the conference, visit <http://icldc6.icldc-hawaii.org/>